SAVED BY A BEAR

Peculiar Adventure in the Mountains of Pennsylvania.
A Catamount Was Killing Jake Berger When His Wife's Favorite Appeared and Saved Him from Being Eaten Up.

Jacob Berger is a mountaineer who, according to the New York Sun, is known to almost every man, woman and child in Sullivan and Columbia counties, Pa. For fifteen years he has resided between Bloomsburg, the county seat of Columbia, and Laporte, in Sullivan county, and by his peculiar dress and mountain habits has become a familiar figure in the different towns and villages. He was known to have a family living somewhere near Hell's Kitchen, but very little was heard of Mrs. Berger or the young Bergers until a discovery made a few days ago by an engineering party.

The surveying corps was in charge of Charles Baker, of Hazleton, and was locating a line for a railroad across the mountain. This brought the party near Hell's Kitchen. Here one of the engineers strayed away from his comrades. While picking his way through the brush he made a discovery which made his hair stand on end. A short distance from him, on the bank of a small stream, he saw a large black bear, smeared with blood and chewing at something, while beside the brute he could distinguish the body of a man, at all appearance lifeless.

The engineer was unarmed, and for a moment he was at a loss how to act. He could not cope with the bear single-handed, and so he ran back to where his companions were at work. When he reached them he was almost breathless from excitement, but managed to inform the party of what he had found. All the guns, axes and other weapons available were secured, and the surveyors started off in hot haste to kill the bear. After a run up the mountain side the bank of the stream was again reached and the party approached cautiously. To their surprise the man was sitting partly erect and endeavoring to support himself with one hand, while the bear, close beside him, was still busy tearing what seemed to be human flesh.

The surveyors stood spellbound. They could not grasp the situation. The bear, at all appearances, was as savage as any in the mountains, and was covered with blood. One of the party finally broke the ice by shouting at the top of his voice and attracting the attention of both the man and the bear. The man signaled to the surveyors to come to him. The party crossed the stream and found that the man was Jacob Berger, and that he was severely wounded about the head and body. One arm was broken and his back was badly sprained. He could not rise. The bear in the meantime watched the strangers closely, but offered no objections to their advances after being cautioned by Berger. After the surveyors had taken Berger to his home, to which they were followed by the bear, he told his story.

Berger first explained that Dary, the bear, was perfectly domesticated and was his wife's particular pet. She had a peculiar fondness for mountain animals, and in a stockade near the cabin she has a sort of domestic menagerie. Dary has long been her favorite, and also that of her daughters. This is accounted for by the fact that the bear has acted as sentinel at the house and stood guard in the absence of the woodsman. He had never been very familiar with Berger himself, and how he happened to accompany him that morning could not be explained.

Berger left home that morning to inspect some timber land. He had gone some distance into the woods when he noticed that the bear was following him. The bear kept a respectful distance in the rear and evinced no desire to cultivate terms of intimacy. In this way the pair pushed through the woods until the bank of the creek was reached. Berger stopped here for a moment, partly to find a safe place to ford the stream, and partly to view the timber. He was so engrossed that he did not hear or notice a large catamount creeping along the limb of a tree above his head. He was about to move away when suddenly the catamount leaped upon him. The animal struck Berger square between the shoulders and knocked him violently to the ground. The teeth and claws of the catamount tore his flesh; his arm was broken by the fall, and he was unable to offer resistance. Just when he had made up his mind that he was done for he heard a loud grunt, the brush was swept aside, and old Dary came upon the scene. The bear leaped savagely upon the catamount, and a battle between the two beasts followed.

The cat was a large one, and fought viciously, and tore badly in his efforts to release himself. It was without avail, however. Dary had suffered several severe scratches, and he was greatly aroused. He tore the cat into pieces, and chewed the carcass into fragments. He was still engaged tearing at the remains of the catamount when the surveyors came along.

HE'S STILL GROWING.
Hassan Ali Promises to Be the Tallest Man Who Ever Lived.

The tallest man for his age in the world today is said to be Hassan Ali, the Egyptian giant, who is now on exhibition in Berlin and has excited the interest of Prof. Virchow and other anthropologists. Hassan Ali is only sixteen years old, but is already almost 7 feet 9 inches in height. He is still growing rapidly, and experts say he will be one of the largest men who have ever lived.

As is so often the case, the parents of the young giant were people of ordinary stature, and, so far as he knows, will be one of the largest men who have ever lived.
